Kiho Muroga is an Associate Professor at Faculty of Economics, Kyushu University. She also serves as a Fellow at the Tokyo Center for Economic Research (TCER) and as a Special Researcher at the Waseda Institute of Political Economy. She obtained her PhD degree from the Graduate School of Economics at the University of Tokyo. She has been conducting research on themes closely related to our lives, such as labor force participation, aging, education, marriage, and gender, from perspectives in labor economics. In April 2020, she joined the Graduate School of Economics at Kyushu University as a Lecturer, and since April 2023, she has been serving as an Associate Professor at the same institution.
Previously, she has worked as a Project Researcher at the Graduate School of Economics at the University of Tokyo, Research Fellowship for Young Scientists (DC2) at the Japan Society for the Promotion of Science, a Trainee at the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD), an external consultant at the Asian Development Bank (ADB), a Seasonal Analyst at Goldman Sachs Japan Co., Ltd., a project member at the Research Institute of Economy, Trade and Industry, a part-time lecturer at Tsuda University, and a part-time lecturer at Seijo University.

The interview series "Listening to Working Women" aims to deepen society's understanding of women's empowerment by gathering insights from women who are leading in various industries. In these interviews, we discuss the challenges of working as a woman, factors that have contributed to career development, and messages for other working women. Additionally, from the perspective of labor economics, I present various government statistics and the latest research trends on the current state of women's participation, and we discuss these in the context of different industries. In this seminar, I will share the insights gained from these activities.
